The Canadian Prairies provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta and the Northwest Territories

The oil sands of Fort McMurray and nearby refineries

The open-range ranching of southern Alberta

The rolling farmlands of Edmonton and Saskatoon

The boreal forests... the sunny landscape of wheat fields, seen in every direction

Some of Canada's most prominent cities: Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Yellowknife...

A 3-million km valley of plains, forests, and farmland and its people. Families who enjoy living here.

For whatever reason one finds themselves here, it is indeed an excellent place to live.

Sometimes, however, one can struggle to find employment here. That's where we come in:

There are many not-for-profit organizations all across Canada whose mission is to support our immigrants and refugees. All are committed to the protection of the rights and privileges of all who find themselves here for whatever reason.

These organizations involve themselves in the settlement, and integration, and support of all immigrants and refugees. This includes networking, advocacy, and information-exchange between multiple services provides, governmental and NGO organizations.

Proudly, Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) are funding hundreds of not-for-profit organizations throughout the Prairies and Northwest Territories Provinces who deliver employment-related and other services. This funding aids in implementing the vision of the government to help break the barrier to unemployment and under-employment of Canada's newest population.

The services provided by these organizations offers an additional benefit for the communities who use them. Local employers, both large and small, are also recipients as this helps them to cast a wider net within the potential workforce. Thus, they are more apt to hire the right candidate for the job, which helps their business grow.

The mission of supporting newcomers, many of whom are highly skilled, helping them to start a new life in Canada with great hope and anticipation is a common goal of not-for-profit organizations. All Canadians, whether natural-born or new, should see the need for these groups. As we experience more and more influx, regionally and nationally, more will be required.

In recent years, and as we foresee into the future, all immigrants – highly skilled, moderately skilled, and unskilled – will be looking for such support. Without this valued support, many individuals would be overwhelmed by this insurmountable challenge. Consequently, not only will the individuals and their families suffer, but all of Canada would experience the devastating impact.

Imagine what our lives would be like with a shortage of drivers, farm workers, office support staff, and grocery clerks. No, we are too compassionate a people to allow that to happen.

Canada currently has an estimated population of 36.95 million, ranking 38th in the world. The average age increased in 2011 from age 40.1 years to 41 years. Fueled mostly by immigration, our population has tripled since the 40's, from 11 million to today's nearly 37 million. Canada attracts more immigrants, relative to its size, per capita than any other nation.

It is likely that our Prairies Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta and the Northwest Territories' population will continue to proliferate for decades to come, given its relative affluence and the large geographical area. Unrivaled access to the regions' natural resources combined with increased population may make Canada a global superpower.

Organizations are offering services such as reception and orientation, translation or interpretation, community referrals to resources, solution-focused counseling, and much more. These services help to meet the needs of the newly arrived immigrants to the Prairies Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta and the Northwest Territories, and all of Canada.

We wish to thank those not-for-profit organizations for all their goodwill work towards this most kind and compassionate service. Your efforts significantly promote the government's vision, as well as help to support our local economy, as well as help local employers.

Thousands of clients have walked through those welcoming doors, seeking support and advocacy, are now gainfully employed, and their employers are seeing the significant benefits, as well as communities seeing much positive economic growth and prosperity.

Because our society is growing at such a fast rate, there is great need for adopting new ways of thinking, new strategies to address the gap in employment, as well as how best to integrate newcomers into the mainstream of our society.

“Navigating Changes in the Field of Employment Services for Newcomers.”

Nonprofit organizations are keenly aware of this great need and are preparing progressive, innovative, cutting edge strategies to meet those looming needs.
